

Dear Hiring Manager,

I am writing this letter to highly recommend Samuel Low, who interned with us as a software engineer at Chariot during the summer of 2022. Sam was able to pick up things quickly and contribute significantly to our team during his time with us.

His greatest contribution was setting up all the work to get a Chariot app built on the Blackbaud marketplace. He independently researched everything that needed to be done to get the app built, documented his learnings clearly and concisely for other Chariot engineers, and got the necessary approvals from Blackbaud. Sam's strong skills in figuring things out as he went along were on full display, as he navigated through the complexities of Blackbaud, something that is not easy to do.

Sam also did various programming tasks primarily in Typescript using our micro-service architecture. He was able to understand and configure his docker container and contribute to the team quickly. Sam was also a good teammate, always willing to assist others, and worked well with another intern, Avery, helping Avery overcome any roadblocks he encountered.

Lastly, Sam suggested a new Postman integration testing framework that Chariot ended up incorporating. This greatly sped up release times and improved performance. Sam's curiosity and ability to come up with good business and engineering solutions were valuable assets to our team.

In conclusion, I highly recommend Samuel Low for any position that requires strong technical skills, problem-solving ability, and the willingness to learn and work with others. Sam's quick ability to learn new programming languages and development styles, his curiosity, and his ability to work with others were his greatest strengths during his time with us at Chariot. Any organization would be lucky to have him on its team.

Sincerely,
Salomon Serfati
